VEGETATIVE CYCLE

The 2022-2023 season had several climatic events that caused one of the lowest harvests in the country in recent years. On October 8th and November 1st, strong and widespread frosts occurred, which caused damage to new shoots and bunches, as well as reductions in yields due to shifting at the time when the fruit sets. Additionally, there were hail storms during December, January and February, which further reduced vineyard production. Finally, heat waves with very extreme maximum temperatures in December, January and February, with less rain compared to previous seasons, accelerated the accumulation of sugar in the berries and advanced the harvest dates by two to three weeks in both white varieties and reds.
